In the first section we'll look briefly at his relationship with God: One of the best summaries I know comes from Hans Boersma ("Was Jesus a Good Person?"), for which I'm grateful. Then, in sections 2, 3 and 4, we'll look at Jesus' 'good deeds' in the Gospels. Much recent discussion, including among those who oppose the premise that Jesus was a hero, has focused on his 'good' or 'righteous' deeds. These are important, but should be considered alongside his actions – good or otherwise – as recorded in the Gospels. Jesus was willing to humble himself, even as a Pharisee. Jesus was willing to offer hope, even as a prophet. Jesus was willing to forgive, even as a sinner (and not just sinners). Jesus was willing to sacrifice himself, even as a holy man. The "other side" raises various objections against these conclusions. Nevertheless, it's critical to see how they confront these realities. Those who oppose the premise that Jesus was a hero are forced to answer this question: Do you want Jesus to be more like the sinners in the Gospels (or do you want him to be less like sinners?), or do you want him to be more like the righteous men in the Gospels (or do you want him to be less like the righteous?).
