[What's new in pancreatic surgery?]. New methods, and new insights about pancreatic cancer have been reported in the recent decade. This short review focuses on the main new developments. New therapies to treat advanced pancreatic cancer include: chemotherapy, targeted drugs such as bevacizumab and gemcitabine-based therapy, cytoreductive procedures, gemcitabine-based chemoradiation. Hopefully, these treatments will improve the survival of patients who have distant metastases. The new developments in the diagnosis of pancreatic cancer have included the screening for new markers (pancreatic cancer-associated antigen, KL-6, SPan-1) and the advances in the endoscopic ultrasound. The new developments in the surgical treatment of pancreatic cancer include: the promising results of the resection of normal pancreas for the surgical treatment of pancreatic cancer, the use of cytoreductive procedures for patients with locally advanced pancreatic cancer, the results of neo-adjuvant chemotherapy for the resection of pancreatic cancer. The procedures that use the new techniques to preserve the functional parenchyma or the spleen include: cystogastrotomy, cystojejunostomy and cystostomy. In conclusion, the tools for the diagnosis and the surgical treatment of patients with pancreatic cancer are evolving rapidly. After years of research, the future of these patients will be improving, although little improvement has been observed in overall survival. First evidence of a human neutroph
