Those protesting the demolition—which are the workers of the APSPPharm—were scared to let the truck carrying the debris go, as its load was about to be too heavy. So the police asked them to remove the truck from the street, and then arrested them in several cases. The police allegedly falsified their times of arrest, and then told them that they would be fined. A video of the protest has been put up on YouTube, and has become one of the top hits in the country, with over 18.7 million views. When asked about the demolition, both the APSPPharm and Telangana government officials have told the media that the building is not illegal, and that other structures were there before it. But since the government has taken the building down without notice, the other structures on the premises have not been deemed safe. The police have also asked the people to join them on the raid to identify the people who stopped the truck. The activists of the APSPPharm workers have stated that they will not voluntarily show their identities, and have asked for legal help.It's looking like former Michigan State coach Mark Dantonio won't be coaching Michigan at the end of this season.
